

Kevin Kohler

Kevin Kohler is a writer, editor, and English instructor with a passion for helping others express themselves properly and eloquently. Continually praised for his sharp instincts and ability to put himself in the place of target audiences, he enjoys taking a wide variety of communication projects to the next level.

Kevin realized his gift for communication in the third grade thanks to winning a “If I Were President...” essay contest sponsored by a local pizzeria. Foundation experiences including volunteering for a church newsletter, writing as a sports stringer and a community columnist for The Capital and several other greater Annapolis publications, and spending over a decade in the trenches of Anne Arundel County as a substitute teacher. His communication career began writing and editing magazine articles, advertisements, brochures, press releases, and more for an international trade association dedicated to helping business owners succeed in an overly saturated discretionary income industry.

In 2010, he started Kohler Communications, a company offering expert editing and English instruction to a diverse array of youth and adults all over the U.S. Since then, he’s edited countless dissertations and academic papers, including more than 100 Doctorate of Nursing Practice capstone papers. He’s also edited numerous books, including American Oz: An Astonishing Year Inside Traveling Carnivals at State Fairs & Festivals: Hitchhiking From California to New York, Alaska to Mexico by Pulitzer Prize nominated journalist Michael Sean Comerford and The Stewards of West River, A Maryland Family During the Revolutionary War by an octogenarian first-time author. Magazine work remains a favorite, and Kevin was Deputy Managing Editor for Emergency Physicians Monthly and Telemedicine magazines.

He graduated magna cum laude from three colleges and holds a Bachelors of Arts in Communications Arts and English (double major) from Salisbury State University and a Masters of Arts in Teaching Secondary English from Johns Hopkins but speaks most fondly of being a graduate and former English instructor of Anne Arundel Community College
