

Tammy Scott

In March of 1989, I set foot in my first classroom and knew I had found my home. Over the next 32 years, I've never lost the passion, the excitement, or the positive influence an educator can make in the lives of children, families and each other. One year ago, I "retired" after 17 years as an Elementary School Principal. Literally the very next day, I began my journey where I started, with teachers. For the last year I have mentored teachers during the most challenging year education has ever embraced, yet each of them stayed strong throughout the year and yes...each is coming back for year 2! It is my belief that our teachers need to feel supported, they need to have structure, they need to be challenged, they need to take risks and they need to know that while a child's academic needs are a must and will always be measured, that building their own positive character lays the groundwork for what tomorrow will bring.

Teachers do more than pave the instructional way for the future, they create memories that students take with them throughout their life. Creating, building upon, demanding that teachers are ready for the classroom, for the behaviors, for the diversity, for whomever is welcomed into their classroom – each layer prepares an educator not only for the year ahead, but for the YEARS to come. Setting teachers up for success is the key for any school willing to shine!
